Word of Life

“There is such a wide spectrum of issues involving the protection of human life and the promotion of human dignity. Good people frequently disagree on which problems to address, which policies to adopt and how best to apply them. But for citizens and elected officials alike, the basic principle is simple: We must begin with a commitment never to intentionally kill, or collude in the killing, of any innocent human life, no matter how broken, unformed, disabled or desperate that life may seem. In other words, the choice of certain ways of acting is always and radically incompatible with the love of God and the dignity of the human person created in His image.”

Planned Obsolescence

This week I was finally forced to get a new cell phone, as the screen on the one I had stopped working. I did have it for over five years, though, and it was a 2013 model, so I shouldn’t really be surprised. However, I am surprised to discover that the concept of “planned obsolescence” is already close to 100 years old. Someone first wrote about it back in 1928. The idea is just that products are no longer build to last, or even that they are intentionally built to fail after a certain period of time (often just a few days or months after the warranty runs out).

They are expected—planned—to become obsolete or practically unusable due to new technologies or due to their own lackluster construction. It does seem rather curious to me that many of the same companies who profess to be so concerned about our care for the environment and developing renewable resources are the very ones whose fragile products are filling our landfills. Pope Francis has complained about our “throw-away culture” on more than one occasion.

Growth and maturity in the spiritual life often involves a very different attitude and approach. We are called to deepen our appreciation for what we’ve always had rather than thinking we’ve outgrown the gifts of God and should move on to other novelties. The Scriptures, the Sacraments, and prayers that we’ve had memorized for years never really become obsolete, but we often find renewal precisely in rediscovering things of the past or things we’ve been familiar with since childhood.

And more than anything else, we never outgrow our dependence on God. There was a time in my life that it finally dawned on me that so often when I would pray to God for virtue, for strength to avoid temptation and sin, I had the wrong idea about what virtue would mean. If I wanted virtue to be strong on my own—so that I wouldn’t have to depend on God so much—of course this isn’t the type of “virtue” that God wants to see in us. God loves us as His own dear children. He wants to be with us. He wants to live His Life in us. Real virtue brings us into closer relationship with God, greater dependence, not independence from Him. Even Jesus Himself said, “I can do nothing on my own” (John 5:30). His strength came precisely from living in complete dependence upon God the Father, with the Holy Spirit working through His human nature.

“Even youths grow weary, and young men stumble and fall, but those who wait for the LORD will renew their strength” (Isaiah 40:30-31).
