Word of Life
"We often assume parenthood happens easily after 'I do,' but for many married couples, it does not. For some, the joy of conception never happens. Others suffer repeated miscarriages. Still others experience secondary infertility... If you experience difficulty bringing a child into your family, know that you are not alone. God is with you, and his Church desires to walk with you... God has a beautiful plan for your life as a married couple."

Expanding Our Perspective

Certain feasts on the calendar bring back memories of my time in Rome. The Feast of the Chair of St. Peter (February 22) is definitely one of those, when they vest the bronze statue of St. Peter in his Basilica in miter and cope, when the huge sculpture of the chair in the apse would be covered with around 60 lit candles. One thing I also remember that all my classmates noticed about going to Mass in Italy is that Italians don't go up for Communion the same way as Americans. I don't think it even occurred to most of us that there could be any other way but to proceed up, row by row, in an orderly fashion.

In many parts of Italy and probably several other countries as well, as the priest consumes the Host, people start to make their way to the front from any and all parts of the church. So whether the person was seated in the front, back, somewhere in between, or if they had just been walking around in the church until Communion time, each proceeds up for Communion pretty much whenever they feel like it, and if you're not proactive, you might be the last one to receive even though you sat in the front row. Some people are more critical of this method, but I appreciate that it makes it less obvious for those who choose to abstain from Holy Communion, and it tends to put less pressure on people to go forward when they would rather stay in their seat. I don't know that this method would replicate very well in every parish because of pew arrangement and lack of space between, but I at least have come to appreciate that the way we've always done things is not necessarily the only way possible, or the best possible in every respect.

But we don't even have to visit another country to have our own way of doing things challenged. Most of us need look no farther than the next person that we see. How do we react when we meet someone who has viewpoints or ways different from our own? I'm often tempted to think, "If only everyone were as intelligent, efficient, and reasonable as I am, the world would be so much better; and no one would ever disagree with me, because I'm right after all." But each of us has a limited vision of things, and we can benefit greatly by keeping an open mind and actually learning from the viewpoint of our neighbor. Someone I used to work with would often say, "Isn't it great that the good Lord made us all different? Just think how boring the world would be if everyone were exactly the same." And the Lord Himself reminds us, "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways my ways" (Isaiah 55:8).

If we are to grow, if our vision of reality is to expand, to come closer to the Lord's perspective on things, we need to have our own views and ways of doing things challenged from time to time. May God give each one of us the patience and docility to truly learn from one another and to let our differences be opportunities for growth and mutual help.
